Did Not Violate

A North Carolina congressman tells of a visit to a court in his native state where public business was nearly interrupted by the cracking of peanut shells, for most of the spectators seemed to be eating the toothsome "gober." Finally the judge lost his temper and announced that he would fine the next peanut cracker $5. All was quiet for a while, when suddenly came a loud pop. The offender was brought before the bar, reprimanded and fined. "Your honor," began the man in a tone of humble apology. "I did not mean to offend against the dignity of the court. I heard what your honor said about not popping peanuts, and indeed, sir, I did not violate the court's order."

"What in thunder, then," roared the judge, "were you doing to produce that infernal disturbance if it wasn't peanuts?"

"May it please your honor, it was a pecan."

At this the judge nearly fell out of his chair, and the crowd indulged in roars of laughter.

"My friend," said the judge, all ill humor gone, "your plea is well taken, for there is a fatal variance between the evidence and the indictment. Mr. Clerk, amend that order I made awhile ago as to include a ten dollar fine for eating pecans in this courtroom."

British Army Red Tape.

A letter of instruction said to have been sent to a British army officer, who reported that Private Blank had lost his greatcoat, runs as follows: "The calculation of the value of a lost greatcoat should be made by deducting the value when worn out from the value when new, as given in article 75, 1805, clothing warrant, dividing the remainder by the number of months the garment should wear, multiplying the quotient by the number of months the garment has actually been worn and subtracting the sum thus obtained from the total value of the new greatcoat. The balance is the amount that should be charged."
